3:30 pm to 4:15 pm	Session Rick Duffy, WPS Canada Arguably, the last major disruption to parking access and revenue control system technology for off-street commercial parking facilities occurred in the mid-1990s when automated, self-serve pay-on-foot stations were introduced. Fast forward to today and it is evident that the majority of parking facilities in urban centres have now either completely eliminated or dramatically reduced their cashier operations. Off-street commercial parking technology is once again undergoing an evolution with the introduction of new solutions such as pay by smart phone parking apps; and with a potential technology disruption on the horizon with the advent of self-driving vehicles. During this session, WPS will explore the current state of parking system technology and we will attempt to boldly predict the evolutionary path that will be followed over the next decade.

4:15 pm	Closing Remarks
